Dartmouth Man and Woman Charged for Animal Cruelty

Dartmouth, Nova Scotia – Mark Davis, 43, and Allison Black, 36, of Dartmouth, have been charged with being a custodian of an animal and permitting the animal to be in distress, contrary to Section 26 (2) of the Animal Protection Act of Nova Scotia.

On January 4, 2020, the Nova Scotia SPCA received a complaint regarding concern for a dog’s wellbeing. Through the course of the investigation, it was determined that the dog was neglected for a period of time causing it to be in distress. As a result of the evidence collected, charges were laid on February 28th, 2020.

“Neglect, whether it is deliberate or unintentional, can lead to compromised health of the animal causing unnecessary suffering,” says Jo-Anne Landsburg, Chief Provincial Inspector at the Nova Scotia SPCA. “As a pet owner, you must be willing to provide treatment when your pet needs medical attention. If you cannot provide appropriate care, it is your responsibility to reach out for help.”

Davis and Black are scheduled to appear at Dartmouth Provincial Court at 9:30am on April 27, 2020. The Nova Scotia SPCA has a zero-tolerance policy for animal cruelty. They urge you to report acts of animal cruelty by contacting the confidential toll-free line at 1-888-703-7722.
